What's spicy this evening

Our Spectator Australia Editor-in-Chief Rowan Dean has wisely said that instead of the Howard-era 'broad church', it is the narrow church of conservative thought – the conviction of the Thatcherites and devotion to the values of liberty and patriotism – that will win Peter Dutton the next government. 'As Labor sinks in the ideological mire of its own making,' adds Rowan Dean, 'the Coalition continue to rise in the polls.' That is provided Dutton removes himself from the deeply unpopular authoritarian trap of 'online safety'. On this, we wait for an answer.

There is a lot of excellent commentary on the future of ‘online safety’ through various bills birthed by the Liberals and brought to term by Albanese. Bad parenting is an understatement to describe what has become of policy in recent months. Damian Coory believes that if the Liberal Party shows weakness on the Misinformation and Disinformation Bill, it will be the end of its political movement. Meanwhile Tony Nikolic has put the bill into the context of international law, our UN obligations, and how we fare against nations such as America which went to the trouble of protecting free speech in the founding documents. And Minny Jackson warns that once you’re finished worrying about the M.A.D. bill, you might want to take a look at the new Hate Crimes Bill which could become a weapon for the LGBT community to stop conservative criticism of gender ideology.

The cover story in the magazine comes from Maurice Newman with excellent artwork by Sarah Dudley and Ben Davis. In The white man’s burden, Newman asks, ‘What is the purpose, then, of stoking division? Who benefits? Apart from the propagators who derive power and moral authority, it would seem only the nation’s enemies.’ I can think of one group that benefits ... those who seek electoral power.

The story of the week is the defamation trial between Moira Deeming and John Pesutto. Detailed by Edie Wyatt in Flat White, there are shocking revelations – including a secret audio recording – and we’re only in the opening days. It’s difficult to believe that the Victorian Liberals burned their reputation amongst women like white phosphorus hitting the air, but here we are.

In the World section, we also have the extraordinary unfolding story of the exploding pagers taking out Hezbollah terrorists. Now the walkie-talkies are exploding too. At the very least, it’s time for the terrorists to live in fear and panic, never knowing if they are safe.

Finally, don’t forget to catch up with Spectator TV. Our Wednesday show was dedicated to freedom of speech with special guests Senator Malcolm Roberts, Professor Ramesh Thakur, and Doctor David Richards.

The best of Flat White

The story to watch this week is the unfolding defamation case between Moira Deeming and John Pesutto. Each day there have been new (and shocking) revelations about what really went on behind the scenes in Victoria. There seems to be a general consensus – certainly if you read Edie Wyatt's excellent piece this week – that the Victorian Liberal Leadership has made a terrible error in judgement with the way it chose to handle Deeming and the Let Women Speak rally in general. Is there any future for the Pesutto leadership after all this legal dust has settled? It seems unlikely.

There are currently three bills that actively seek to silence the political speech of Australians, all of which enjoy support of Labor, the Greens, and a scary number of Liberals who should know better. By now, most people are aware of the Misinformation and Disinformation Bill, along with the plot to kick teenagers off social media. Well, now there's also a new Hate Speech Bill which many fear will allow the LGBTQ+ community to weaponise the law against conservative criticism of various activist movements. To some extent this is already happening, but with the power of Parliament behind them, many fear we are swiftly headed toward a Chinese-style method of political speech.

What's spicy this evening

The IPCC are often paraded around as the high priests of climate science, but does anyone have the courage to question their apocalyptic predictions and prophetic data sets? According to Howard Thomas Brady – yes, there is a team revisiting the existing data with a sober and clinical eye. If the IPCC is wrong, and their predictions are wrong, are we – the plebs – going to get any of our money back that has been wasted on Net Zero?

Co-authors Michael de Percy and Sascha Dov Bachmann have drawn attention to the great shame of Westerners who fail to condemn foreign terror regimes or criticise those nations that find themselves fighting an existential fight against them. In a country obsessed with causing offence, hurt feelings, and hate speech – it seems there is a lot of tolerance for terror within the elite veneer of our society.

‘The majority of Australians recognise that their country is in decline... Half of Australians believe that “society is broken” and six in ten believe the economy is rigged toward the nation’s elite.’ It’s a common thread running through conversations in this country. Can the nation be fixed – is anyone even trying?

There’s a general feeling, according to Andrew L. Urban, that Ukraine has been let down by the international community but in particular by the world’s ‘policeman’ the US. ‘Boris Johnson asks rhetorically, “Can anything like this happen? It certainly can, but it depends on us, on Nato, and above all on America.” There’s the rub.’

And we have two new shows for you today. On Tuesday I sat down with the IPA’s John Storey to talk about the immediate future of Australia’s Defence (or lack thereof) under the watch of successive governments who seem to place national security at the bottom of their list. Also on the show, Joel Gilbert aka the man who has decided to interview and AI Al Gore – the Godfather of the Climate Change cult.

Meanwhile, on Wednesday we had a packed Speccie TV starting with Double Shot creator Terry Barnes talking about the nonsense that is ‘Welcome to Country’ and the Royal’s ‘Walkabout Tour’. We have UK political commentator Chris Davies on to talk about the inexcusable and ridiculous gaffes of Keir Starmer. Michael de Percy brings us some good news stories with Elon Musk and Tony Nikolic asks if Australia is about to violate free speech protections with its censorship legislation.

SPECTATOR | AUSTRALIA

The best of Flat White

As we put this email to bed on Friday, it appears – and we do not wish to jinx anything here – that the government no longer has the numbers to pass the MAD bill through the Senate. Following a massive campaign to call the undecided Senators, several have announced on social media that they will not support the Misinformation and Disinformation Bill. If this turns out to be true, and they keep their word, Australia has narrowly avoided the most coercive regulations regarding social media of any country in the English Speaking World – and that is saying something, considering we are competing with the famously draconian EU and Starmer's two tier Britain. However, while one victory may be imminent, the under 16 social media ban could be even more subversive and dangerous with its requirement to implement Digital ID and facial recognition for all social media users. This proposal has the support of Labor and the Liberal Party. Unless there is some kind of huge public backlash, it will likely breeze through before Christmas, as Dutton has requested.

Regardless of what social media laws are passed, the eSafety Commission is going to be one of the first victims of the Trump presidency. With news coming through later in the week that Trump intends to pass a law preventing social media from policing speech in a way that violates US free speech protections – Twitter, Facebook, and any other social media platform based in the US will be unable to comply with takedown orders from the eSafety Commission. What happens if Australia then threatens Trump’s political friend, Elon Musk, with huge fines? Our best guess? A few nasty trade tariffs. The truth is, Australia may be forced to abandon social media restrictions entirely or risk a geopolitical disaster.

The best of Flat White

Side-stepping the Misinformation and Disinformation Bill has landed Australia straight into the (arguably worse) Under 16 bill. This thought bubble has support from both the Liberal Party and Labor Party – along with a bizarre insistence that this hugely controversial piece of legislation be rushed in ‘before Christmas’ without any detail or proper submission protest. Many of our writers have put to print this week the extent to which this could be a disaster for free speech in Australia. As an example of how little thought has been put into these gargantuan overreaches of power into the digital realm, there has not been a single word said of what might become of this legislation when Donald Trump steps into office and puts new rules in place that make it impossible for American-based social media companies to enforce Australian legislation.

Also in the news this week, Treasurer Jim Chalmers has sparked outrage with plans to raid the Future Fund for what many will be dodgy investments in high-risk renewable energy projects. The problem with amassing a large pile of cash is that socialists see it as a bank to rob rather than a safety net for future generations. Is this what ‘re-imagining capitalism’ looks like for Mr Chalmers?
