

MULTI LEVEL PRACTICE TEST 22

PART 1

Do you like outdoor activities?

Yes, I do. But when the weather is very pleasant, and I have plenty of time, then I'd like outdoor activities. I like to play with my baby in a park at a stone's throw from my home. Moreover, I would like to play badminton which is my favorite pastime activity.

What outdoor sports do you like?

I like playing badminton as well as football. Whenever I play these sports, then I feel more energetic, motivated, and confident. I also noticed that I reduced my weight since I have started to play these sports.

How much time do you spend outdoors every week?

I spend mostly an hour a week playing these sports. Moreover, when I am free from my workplace like I have taken time off, at that time, I also utilize playing sports, but sometimes it is challenging for me to go outside to play with my baby then I play inside some games like hiding and seek.

What (types of) outdoor activities are popular in your country?

There are many very popular sports among people like badminton, football, cricket, and now wrestling is also gaining ground.

What outdoor activities do you most like to do?

Normally I'll go for a jogging around my house in the morning so that I can take some physical exercises while enjoying the fresh air, but if I can invite some more friends I would go for a simple football match with them because football is a sociable activities so that I can have more fun with my friends and make new friends as well.

How often do you do outdoor activities?

Well, I do these physical exercises from time to time. Normally if I'm not busy with my work, I will go for a jogging around my house in the morning to take some physical exercises while enjoying the fresh air, probably four times in a week; but if I have lots of on things my hands I'll probably focus on my work.

PART 2

Describe a popular product in your country

You should say:

- What it is
- How it is made
- Why it is popular
- And explain what you think of it.

I don't think a lot of tangible products can be associated with London, except perhaps a handful of tacky keychains aimed at tourists, but a number of exceedingly popular intangible products, namely software is created in London.

One of these is Citymapper. It's an app that helps people navigate public transportation in many cities. It doesn't just help people navigate London's expansive transportation network, but it works in several other cities too.

I'm not sure when it was first created, but it feels like it's been around for a least a decade. It's become as ingrained in my daily life as much as social media has.

I think there have been several other attempts at creating similar apps in the past, but none have really seemed to take off.

Before this app was released I used to use paper maps to navigate London. I'd rarely use busses because I found them a bit too confusing, and instead opted for the London Underground, which, despite its vast nature, appeared simpler to use. You'd routinely see hordes of people crowding around the big maps at the entrances, or peering over the mini fold-out maps that were available free of charge at every station. Now this is a rarer sight, and most of the time when people are plotting their route in such a way, they're tourists who haven't heard of Citymapper yet. As for how it's made, it's created by software developers sitting in front of their computers in an office. As I'm not a software developer, I can't really go into the specifics but I imagine they spend a lot of time learning their craft and practicing it in order to become skilled enough to create such an app. Every time I go to a city that I can't use this app in, I feel like I struggle a lot more than I should.

PART 3

Why do people use imported products?

People use imported products for many reasons. They are different from the local products. So, people buy them just for a change. Secondly, they may want to show off. Some imported products may have better quality, but it may not be necessarily so. Another major reason is that these imported products are now readily available online. People don't have to go anywhere to buy them.

Do different places have their own popular products?

Yes, different places have their own products, but these products are now available everywhere. For example, Indian traditional suits have their outlets all over the world. But some things are associated with certain places.

What food is popular throughout the world?

All foods are available everywhere. As people have migrated to all parts of the world, so their food has also travelled with them. For example, Indian and Chinese cuisines are there all over because Indians and Chinese are everywhere.

Why do people living in different regions like different food?

This is because, places with different climates support the growth of different vegetables and fruits. For example, Indian climate supports spices and that's why Indian people like spicy food. Similarly, European climate supports potatoes and so potatoes are a prominent part of European diet.

What are some kinds of food you never eat? Why?

Stuffed peppers, pan-fried Scottish scallops served with tomato relish, salmon mulligatawny, Japanese Sushi, popadums, Sour cream and Chive fries and Shrimp cocktails are some of the food items I have never eaten. Most of these items are not common in our city and I have heard about those menus from my friends. Since they are not available in our city and I do not have an extensive travelling experience, I did not get the chance to take them.
